Part A: What is a Writing Portfolio?

什么是写作作品集？(Shénme shì xiězuò zuòpǐn jí?)

A portfolio is a curated collection of your work that demonstrates your skills and development. It should include final drafts and, importantly, earlier drafts and outlines to show your process.

作品集是展示你技能和发展的精选作品集合。它应包括最终稿，重要的是，还应包括早期的草稿和提纲以展示你的过程。

Part B: The Reflective Statement

反思陈述 (Fǎnsī chénshù)

Write a brief letter to your future self. Answer:

给你未来的自己写一封简短的信。回答：

- What was the most significant writing skill you gained?
- 你获得的最重要的写作技能是什么？
- What are you most proud of in your research paper?
- 你的研究论文中最让你自豪的是什么？
- What would you do differently next time?
- 下次你会有什么不同的做法？
- How can you use these skills in your next class?
- 你如何在下一次课程中使用这些技能？

Task 1 任务一 (Rènwù yī) (20 mins):

Assemble your course work. Select 2-3 key pieces that show your growth. Begin drafting a one-paragraph reflective statement for your portfolio.

整理你的课程作业。选择2-3件能展示你成长的关键作品。开始为你的作品集起草一段反思陈述。

- Presentation Skills 演讲技巧 (Yǎnjiǎng jìqiǎo): For job interviews, team meetings, conferences.

Part B: Looking Forward

展望未来 (Zhǎnwàng wèilái)

Where will you use these skills next? In your next year of study? In a potential job? Discuss how these skills are valued across different fields.

接下来你将在哪里使用这些技能？在下一学年的学习中？在一个潜在的工作中？讨论这些技能在不同领域如何受到重视。

Task 2 任务二 (Rènwù èr) (20 mins):

Create a "Skills Map." List the 5 most important skills from this course and brainstorm one specific way you could use each one in another subject or real-world scenario next year.

The provided Notion site is a detailed curriculum and student guide for a Grade 12 Academic Writing and Nonfiction course. Its primary goal is to equip students with the skills to write a sophisticated, university-level research paper. The content is bilingual (English and Chinese), designed for a target audience of Chinese-speaking students preparing for English-medium higher education.

The key principles of the content can be broken down and connected to established academic theory and peer-reviewed research as follows:

Principle 1: The Writing Process as Iterative and Structured

Content Analysis: The guide heavily emphasises a structured, multi-stage writing process. It moves systematically from foundational concepts (e.g., "What is Academic Writing?") through topic selection, research, outlining, drafting, and revision. This demystifies a complex task and makes it manageable for students.

Supporting Scholarly Justification:

This approach is strongly supported by the concept of "Process Writing," which has been a dominant pedagogical model since the 1970s. It counters the "product-focused" approach that only values the final text.

- Connecting Source: Flower, L. and Hayes, J.R. (1981). A Cognitive Process Theory of Writing. College Composition and Communication, 32(4), pp.365-387.
 - Justification: This seminal article breaks down writing into planning, translating, and reviewing processes, which are recursive and interactive. The Notion guide's structure (e.g., separate sections for "Developing a Research Question," "Outlining," and "Drafting & Revision") directly mirrors this cognitive model, teaching students to manage these distinct but overlapping mental tasks.
- Connecting Source: Murray, D.M. (1972). Teach Writing as a Process Not Product.
 - Justification: Murray's famous argument is the philosophical bedrock of this guide. By focusing on stages like revision and multiple drafts, the guide teaches writing as a "process of discovery" rather than the mere transcription of a pre-formed idea, exactly as Murray advocated.

Principle 2: Genre-Based Pedagogy and Rhetorical Awareness

Content Analysis: The guide explicitly teaches the conventions of a specific genre: the academic research paper. It covers essential elements like thesis statements, literature reviews, and incorporating sources. The bilingual aspect is crucial here, as it addresses the "contrastive rhetoric" challenge—helping students navigate the different rhetorical expectations between Chinese and English academic writing.

Supporting Scholarly Justification:

This aligns with Genre Theory and the pedagogical work of John Swales, who analysed the structural patterns of academic writing.

- Connecting Source: Swales, J.M. (1990). Genre Analysis: English in Academic and Research Settings. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

- Justification: Swales' concept of the "Create a Research Space" (CARS) model for research paper introductions is a standard tool for teaching academic writing. The guide's instruction on how to establish context and present a thesis is a practical application of this model, helping students understand the moves they need to make to sound like a member of the academic community.
- Connecting Source: Connor, U. (1996). Contrastive Rhetoric: Cross-Cultural Aspects of Second-Language Writing. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
 - Justification: Connor's work is foundational in understanding how writing conventions differ across cultures. The guide's very existence, being bilingual, implicitly acknowledges this challenge. It helps bridge the gap for students whose first language (Chinese) may employ different patterns of organisation, argumentation, and writer-reader responsibility.

Principle 3: The Importance of Critical Source Engagement

Content Analysis: A significant portion of the guide is dedicated to research skills: evaluating sources, summarising, paraphrasing, and quoting effectively. It rightly frames these not as mechanical tasks but as critical engagement with existing scholarship, which is essential for developing a student's own voice and argument.

Supporting Scholarly Justification:

This reflects the core academic value of entering a scholarly conversation, a concept popularised by Gerald Graff and Cathy Birkenstein.

- Connecting Source: Graff, G. and Birkenstein, C. (2021). "They Say / I Say": The Moves That Matter in Academic Writing. 5th ed. New York: W.W. Norton & Company.
 - Justification: The entire premise of Graff and Birkenstein's work is that academic writing is a response to what others have said ("they say") so that the writer can then present their own argument ("I say"). The guide's focus on integrating sources through summary and paraphrase is a direct method for teaching students how to effectively set up this "they say / I say" structure.

Principle 4: Metacognition and Self-Regulated Learning

Content Analysis: The guide includes elements that encourage students to reflect on their learning process, such as self-assessment checklists and prompts for revision. This fosters metacognition—the ability to think about one's own thinking and learning strategies.

Supporting Scholarly Justification:

Research in educational psychology strongly links metacognitive skills with improved academic performance, particularly in complex tasks like writing.

- Connecting Source: Zimmerman, B.J. (2002). Becoming a Self-Regulated Learner: An Overview. Theory into Practice, 41(2), pp.64-70.
 - Justification: Zimmerman's model of self-regulated learning involves forethought, performance control, and self-reflection. The guide's structured process encourages forethought (planning, outlining) and performance control (drafting). The inclusion of revision guides and self-assessment tools directly promotes the final, crucial phase of self-reflection, helping students transition from dependent to independent learners.

Summary

The Academic Writing & Nonfiction: G12 Student Book is a pedagogically sound resource that aligns with established best practices in composition theory. Its structure is supported by Process Writing theory (Flower & Hayes; Murray), its focus on form by Genre Analysis (Swales), its bilingual approach by Contrastive Rhetoric (Connor), its research component by the concept of entering a scholarly conversation (Graff & Birkenstein), and its reflective elements by theories of Self-Regulated Learning (Zimmerman). It effectively prepares students for the demands of university-level academic discourse by making its underlying processes and conventions explicit and teachable.
